Midterm Exam Scheduling - Implementation Report

The purpose of this program is to implement a scheduling algorithm for midterm exams, considering various constraints such as student and professor availability, classroom capacities, and the ability to block specific hours for common courses. The program reads input data from CSV files, including the class list, blocked hours and classroom capacities, and outputs a schedule that adheres to the specified constraints.

1. Reading CSV Files

The program reads three CSV files: one containing class lists, another containing blocked hours, and a third containing classroom capacities. It uses separate functions (readingToClassesStruct, readingToBlockedHoursStruct, and readingToClassroomsStruct) to parse the data into appropriate data structures (Classes, BlockedHours, and Classrooms arrays).

2. Scheduling Algorithm

The scheduling algorithm is implemented using backtracking. The program attempts to assign exam times for each class while adhering to the specified constraints. It checks student and professor availability, ensures that a classroom's capacity is not exceeded, and considers any blocked hours for common courses.

The `backtrackToFindSchedule` function recursively explores possible schedules, and the `checkSchedule` function verifies whether a given schedule is valid based on the defined constraints.

3. Challenges Faced

One notable challenge was ensuring the correctness of the scheduling algorithm and handling various constraints simultaneously. The implementation required careful consideration of class capacities, student and professor availability, and blocked hours.

While testing the program, we encountered different outputs in different environments, which posed challenges during the implementation.

4. Conclusion

The program utilizes backtracking to explore possible schedules while considering student, professor, and classroom constraints. The final output provides a clear representation of the exam schedule, helping users visualize the assigned times for each class.
